ACTIVE PRINCIPLES

CAVIAR: The caviar has great antioxidant and moisturizing power. It stimulates cell renewal and gives firmness to the skin. Caviar contains many nutrients, and good fatty acids, easily absorbed by the skin. In particular, the extract contains the vitelline, a mixture of phosphoproteins and phospholipids, highly beneficial for epithelial cells. The other important substances contained in the caviar are arginine that enhances the synthesis of collagen, leucine involved in wound repair processes, threonine that deals with the formation of collagen and elastin, the lysine that contributes to the metabolism of fatty acids and helps in cell repair. Finally, caviar is rich in vitamins such as A, B12, D and E.

RETINOL: Performs different functions of epithelial tissues, including the processes of cell differentiation keratinocyte, the induction of the synthesis of collagen and elastin and is effective in preventing photoaging. Its mechanism of action gives the skin cells in a vital phase of their bodies at a young age. It is used in various cosmetic formulations as an active ingredient in the treatment of skin aging, the pigmentation and acne disorders.

COENZYME Q10: Given the enormous biological potential, especially given the antioxidant and known activities of the deleterious effects of oxidative stress to human skin, this molecule is very well wrought in cosmetic field because it is able to support its antioxidant capabilities of keratinocytes; reduce oxidative damage, especially membrane and genomic, against the same cells; prevent dysfunction of the fibroblasts, preserving the role biosynthetic to structural proteins of the dermis and prevent the damage caused by UV rays and photoaging.
